Notes on Contributors

J. Stephen Addcox is a Marion L. Brittain Postdoctoral Fellow in the School of Literature, Media, and Communication at the Georgia Institute of Technology, USA. His research interests include nineteenth-century literature, memory, and video game studies. His previous work has appeared in Victorian Literature and Culture (41:2, 2013) as well as Victorian Network (1:1, 2009). Additionally, he has written on video games for Kill Screen (‘The Literary Heritage of Sunless Sea’, 2015), Unwinnable (‘Verse and Controller’, 2015), and Play the Past (‘The Serialized Video Game’, 2014).

Sherrin Berezowsky completed her PhD in English Literature at the University of Western Ontario, Canada, and teaches in the Department of English at MacEwan University, Edmonton, Canada. Her research interests focus on the ways in which biological inheritance was understood to influence class and shape the nation. Her article ‘Statistical Criticism and the Eminent Man in Francis Galton’s Hereditary Genius’ is forthcoming in Victorian Literature and Culture.

Marie-Luise Kohlke lectures in English Literature at Swansea University, Wales, UK, with main research foci in neo-Victorianism, trauma narrative/theory, gender and sexuality. She is General and Founding Editor

Kate Mitchell is a Senior Lecturer in English at the Australian National University, Canberra ACT, Australia. Her research is focused on nineteenth- and twentieth-century literary and cultural history, neo-Victorian fiction and the historical novel. She is author of History and Cultural Memory in Neo-Victorian Fiction: Victorian Afterimages (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010) and co-editor with Nicola Parsons of a collection of essays entitled Reading Historical Fiction: The Revenant and Remembered Past (Palgrave Macmillan, 2013). Her articles on historical fiction and memory have appeared in Neo-Victorian Studies and in a number of edited collections and journals.

Marc Napolitano graduated from the University of North Carolina, USA, with a PhD in English. His scholarship focuses on musical adaptations of Victorian novels, and he has published articles in Studies in Musical Theatre, Dickens Studies Annual, and Adaptation. Last year, Oxford University Press published his book Oliver!: A Dickensian Musical, which received the Society for Theatre Research Annual Book Award. He works at Wagner College, Staten Island, New York, USA, lecturing in the English and musical theatre programmes.
Harvey O’Brien lectures in film studies at University College Dublin, Ireland, with current research focus on action and adventure film. He is the author of The Real Ireland: The Evolution of Ireland in Documentary Film (Manchester University Press, 2004) and Action Movies: The Cinema of Striking Back (Columbia University Press, 2012). He is co-editor (with Ruth Barton) of Keeping it Real: Irish Film and Television (Wallflower, 2004), and co-editor of the journal Film and Film Culture. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Irish Film Institute and former Associate Director of the Boston Irish Film Festival.

Lin Elinor Pettersson lectures in English Literature at the University of Málaga, Spain. Her research interests include space, gender and the body in neo-Victorian fiction with a special focus on Victorian entertainment spaces, such as the music hall, the circus and the freak show. She is author of the monograph Gender Performance and Spatial Negotiation in the Neo-Victorian Novel (Spicum, 2014) as well as book chapters and articles on neo-Victorian literature, including “‘The Private Rooms and Public Haunts’: Theatrical Acts and the City of London in Michel Faber’s The Crimson Petal and the White’ in Twenty-First Century Fiction: What Happens Now (Palgrave Macmillan, 2013) and “‘Not the Kind of Thing Anyone Wants to Spell Out”: Lesbian Silence in Emma Donoghue’s Neo-Victorian Representation of the Codrington Divorce’ in Lambda Nordica (2:18, 2013).

Benjamin Poore is Lecturer in Theatre in the Department of Theatre, Film and Television, University of York, England, UK. His first book was Heritage, Nostalgia and Modern British Theatre: Staging the Victorians (Palgrave, 2012). He is currently at work on a monograph on Sherlock Holmes in contemporary theatre, and an edited collection titled Neo-Victorian Villains; he is also co-editing (with Dr Beth Palmer) a forthcoming special issue of Neo-Victorian Studies on ‘Performing the (Neo-)Victorian’.

Saverio Tomaiuolo is Lecturer in English Literature and Translation at Cassino University, Italy. He has written a monograph on Tennyson’s narrative poems, a book on translation theory, as well as articles and essays on Victorian Literature, Translation Studies, and neo-Victorianism. He has